Integrated Salary and Benefits Jun 30 2021 The purpose of this report is to explore the concept of comparability which integrates salary and benefits and to assess its potential for State and local governments. The booklet highlights the experience of California and discusses some of the aspects of the system proposed by the Federal Government for Federal employees. It is not intended to be a "how to" publication, but an informational piece which provides State and local decision-makers and employee organizations basic information needed to understand what is involved in the concept.

Comparison of Federal and Private Sector Pay and Benefits Jun 11 2022 Pursuant to a congressional request, GAO provided current information on private sector and federal white-collar employee compensation packages. By law, federal employees' salaries are set at a level equitable and comparable with similar levels of work in the private sector, unless the President proposes alternative federal pay rates. There is no such requirement for benefits comparability. GAO analyzed several pay and benefits comparability studies conducted by private and federal organizations, but did not independently validate the data contained in the studies. GAO noted that an independent study found that: (1) as of 1984, federal employees' total compensation averaged 7.2 percent less than that for private sector employees; and (2) in 1985, the difference increased to 9 percent or more because the federal pay increase for 1985 was limited to less than the average pay increase in the private sector. GAO found that: (1) frequent presidential use of alternative pay rates caused pay for federal employees to lag significantly behind that for private sector employees; (2) an 18.28 percent federal pay increase would be necessary to achieve federal pay comparability in 1985; (3) the federal retirement system is better than the average private sector system because it is worth more as a percentage of the average employee's pay, and federal retirement benefits are adjusted annually to offset consumer price increases; (4) private studies indicated that private sector employers generally pay a higher share of employee health insurance premiums than does the government; (5) private sector employee life insurance programs provide more basic coverage than the federal employee program, usually at no cost to the employee; (6) while federal employees generally receive one less holiday than private sector employees, this is offset by more generous federal annual leave benefits; and (7) federal sick leave lags behind the average private sector illness and disability income plan by 0.7 percent of pay.

The Federal Employees Health Benefits Program Feb 07 2022 The federal government is the largest employer in the United States, and the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program (FEHBP) is the largest employer-sponsored health insurance program. FEHBP covers about 8 million individuals, providing an estimated $43 billion annually in health care benefits. The participation rate among eligible enrollees is about 90% (85% of eligible individuals enrol in FEHBP as the primary policy holder, and another 5% are covered as a family member). This book examines the essential elements and legislative history of FEHBP with a focus on available health insurance options; laws affecting FEHBP; and health benefits for Members of Congress.
